time passes, and with it go our high school days. occasional material reminders — outdated booster buttons, incomprehensible physics labs, ragged gym suits — gradually seem to lose themselves in the hustle and bustle of living. only impressions of individual moments live on and make us recall the memories of a year. it is through these impressions imprinted in our minds that the constant stream of our high school experiences is lifted out of the realm of time. football games, impossible tests, and shortened periods all become immortalized. a year has passed, but it is not over. this year, as well as the memories it encompasses, is eternal; an impression has been made in time.
